Leadership

Transactional Leadership

- Rewards and punishments are treated as determinants of performance.
- Work by establishing clear structures and chain of command.
- Assumptions-(i) People are motivated by rewards and punishments; (ii) Social systems work best with a clear chain of command; (iii) when people have agreed to undertake an assignment, a part of the deal is that they give up all authority to the manager.

Transformational Leadership

- Transformational Leadership is about change and innovation.
- Assumption
- ✓ People follow a person who inspires them
- ✓ A person with vision and passion can achieve great things
- ✓ The way to get work done is by injecting enthusiasm and energy.

Transformational Leadership

- Increase awareness of subordinates of the importance of their tasks and the significance of performing them well.
- Alert subordinates of the need for personal growth, development, and accomplishment
- Inspire and stimulate subordinates to work for the good of the organization.

Revitalization

- Dissatisfaction with the status quo.
- The process of transition is seldom smooth
- Accompanied by resistance from the employees.

Creating a Vision

- Overriding principle that guides an organization.
- Create a vision that critical mass of employees accept willingly.
- The vision must correctly respond to environmental pressures.

Institutionalizing the Change

- Dream must be translated into reality.
- Must gauge the psychology of the workers.
- Are result oriented and spend a lot of time communicating.
- Engage in impression management.

Charismatic Leadership

- Those who exhibit certain personal traits, abilities, and behavior and who have unusually strong influence on followers' emotions and values.
- Model their own behavior for followers to emulate by setting high performance standards for themselves.
- Charisma matters enormously in start-ups and turnaround contexts.

Servant Leadership

- Robert Greenleaf coined the term in the 1970s to describe a leader who does not formally recognize oneself as a leader.
- Is a form of democratic leadership.
- Humility is the key characteristic and focus.
- Attuned to people around and empathetically understand what they are thinking.
- Motto-Serve to Lead.